

BEST PRACTICES

The COVID-19 outbreak has exerted a great pressure to the health systems around the world. Adaptations and rearrangements of priorities have modified primary care and public health services, and have demonstrated once again the importance of social determinants of health. The daunting challenges require adaptations of models of care to the new normal.

One of the most relevant change is the increase of remotes consultations (using symptom checkers, electronic messaging, and phone or video consultations) decreasing faceto-face consultations. It is important to consider which of these new designs have better outcomes and which of them could reduce PHC values.

This section aims to conduct a comprehensive literature review, elucidating the advancements and exemplary approaches in delivering primary care during and in the aftermath of the COVID-19 outbreak.

The primary objective of this section is to identify cutting-edge and novel models for delivering primary care services. Additionally, it seeks to contribute case studies that showcase innovative approaches in care models to the PHC (Primary Health Care) Country Case.
